A medical massage therapist is a licensed massage therapist (LMT) who treats health conditions diagnosed by a doctor. Massage therapy in medical settings is growing because the practice of combining traditional and alternative medicine is increasing. Cornerstone Health is committed to addressing the Body, Soul, and Spirit with each of our patients and clients. More medical clinics are offering these types of treatments and more health insurance companies will cover the cost. The successful candidate must possess the necessary licensure and experience required to be credentialed by health insurers.

Scope of practice

A medical massage therapist works closely with doctors to treat patients who are affected by pain, illness, or injury. Their typical day-to-day roles and responsibilities include:

- Providing massages to patients for a variety of lengths
- Using various massage techniques to manipulate muscles and soft tissue to treat chronic pain and injuries.
- Listening and explaining various aspects of medical massage to patients
- Massage soft body tissues to relieve discomfort and provide treatment for injuries, wellness maintenance or medical conditions.
- Apply pressure to specific parts of the body with the hands and fingers to release muscle tension and bring relief from related symptoms.
- Discuss client concerns, medical histories and specific stresses or pains to develop the most effective approach to massage treatment.
- Develop personalized treatment plans for individual clients that specify massage types, treatment areas and treatment frequency. Consult with psychologists, physicians and other healthcare professionals for help with treatment plan development.
- Refer clients to other professionals and therapists when appropriate and necessary to treat additional symptoms.

The work of the LMT has the specific goal; to alleviate pain and treat health conditions such as neuropathy, chronic pain, fibromyalgia, sports injuries, or even high blood pressure, just to name a few.

The work of a medical licensed massage therapist differs from that of a general massage therapist. Medical massage therapists have advanced training and/or experience that allows them to provide care focused on healing injuries, improving function, or increasing circulation. The LMT will typically receive referrals and orders from a physician as to the type of massage treatment they should give their patients.
